AUTUMN FORECASTS VARIED STYLES IN SUITS

IN THE new suits for fall and winter interest is centered in the coats which are considerably varied in style. Leaving out the box coat, which is a law unto itself in the matter of length, coats are longer than for some seasons, and therefore more dignified. The Russian blouse is welcomed by its devotees in smartly designed models that are bloused at the back and belted at the front with fullness on the hips. There are some trim, semi-fitted, severely tailored coats with a decided flare in their skirts and notched collars that are distinguished by their lack of trimming, and there are many fur-trimmed and embroidered costume suits that will prove the mainstay of any winter wardrobe that takes them on.

as wraps to be worn with frocks as well as their own particular skirts. Chin collars there are in great variety of shapes, wide and either straight or flaring, but they divide honors with the tuxedo collar. Squirrel, kolinsky, beaver, caracul, fox, broadtail and beaver harmonize with the quiet colors and soft fabrics which the season approves. The handsome suit pictured here is typical with its wide sleeves belted with fur and richly embroidered, its eccentric collar of fur, and embroidery emphasizing its low waistline. It has a narrow girdle of the cloth with narrow bands of fur on the ends.

It is settled that skirts are not to be much lengthened. After rumors that they were going to the ankles it turns out that they have struck a happy medium and stop at the shoe tops.

OIL POSSIBILITIES
GOOD, SAYS BALLIET

gases, which would pass off and be but little in evidence now. It is possible, though not now in evidence, that subsequent distillation may have formed gas pockets, in which event no surprise would occur if one is tapped.

"We have, therefore, an enormous seepage basin from which we may expect oil that has risen from below, as well as the drainage of the oil to reservoirs of the valley. The overburden is so loose, stratified or fractured that the gases have been permitted to pass off as suggested above, while the oil will be found in the reservoirs of the sand strata when encountered. I cannot argue for shallow oil, with this heavy overburden, but would expect high gravity oil from the depth of the overburden.

Stratigraphy.
"Having satisfied ourselves that the conditions for the existence of reservoirs of oil are possible, it is next in order to determine, if possible, in what formation the original oil deposits occurred. No comprehensive log of the formation exists of this basin, but if the conditions of west Texas, which have some similarity, are found, we could expect the deep oil reservoir above the middle of the Pennsylvanian, and in the Permian, which immediately overlies the Pennsylvanian. It is quite certain that the Cambrian formations contain no oil and the Pennsylvanian, in other oil fields where the geology has been explored, rests on the Cambrian. This stratigraphy is purely comparative with other fields, but might have some value in establishing the limit of depth.

Structure.
"The remaining factor is to recognize the necessary flexure for the segregation of oil and gas in commercial quantities—domes, anticlines or monoclines. Unless such structure exists, and can be clearly recognized, any attempt to differentiate areas for oil and gas is the merest guesswork, even though oil seepages may be visible on the very surface. This is true in Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Canada, Wyoming, California and Texas. It is a rule in oil operation that "segregation follows structure." In the present consideration of Fish Lake valley there seems to be two folds—within my observations at the lower end of the valley. One appears to be a monocline, or the east flank of an unnamed range of mountains west of the lake bed with a northwest and southeasterly strike, and the other is an anticline easily recognized, southward of Emigrant pass on the east side of the lake bed.

"West of the range, on the west side of the lake, the rocks appear to be older formations than the period in which oil has been demonstrated.

Conclusion.
"First Both stratigraphy and structure are possible and favorable for the finding of oil reservoirs.
"Second: I do not expect shallow oil, unless it is high gravity oil rising through fractured strata.
"Third: No adverse conditions for finding oil exist in the geology.
"Fourth: There is but one drill operating in the valley, whereas there should be two or three more to explore the basin for even a reasonable investigation of different sections."

RUINS PALACE AT THEBES ARE INVESTIGATED

(By Associated Press)
ATHENS, Nov. 9.—Dr. Keramopoulos, one of the Greek inspectors of antiquities, has accomplished some most interesting work in the ruins of the palace at Thebes. According to legend, this palace was founded by Cadmus, who is said to have first brought the alphabet to Greece. In previous campaigns the remains of the fresco decoration of the earlier palace, 1600 to 1400 B. C., were brought to light. This consisted largely of a frieze of elaborately dressed and coiffured women carrying flowers, painted jugs or ivory boxes.

This year the excavator has found some of the storerooms of the later palace, 1400 to 1100 B. C. From these there have been extracted a hundred or more big stirrup jars. They are unfortunately broken but they can be put together again.

A considerable number of these jars have painted on them inscriptions in the still undecipherable Mycenaean alphabet. The letters or rather signs are of a hieroglyphic character and are derived but differ from the well-known and equally undecipherable Cretan prehistoric alphabet. Scientists believe it possible that the difference of alphabet means a difference of language.

Burglars Don't Seek the Light!

Darkness is their stock in trade. They work by stealth—unheard and unseen—their movements cloaked in secrecy. It's honest folks that see the light. They are the only ones who can risk it.

It's the same way in business. The merchant who is not sure of his goods does not dare to advertise. Advertising would hasten the end of his business career—put him to a test he could not meet.

The merchant who advertises, deliberately invites your inspection. He tells you about his product and then lets it stand on its own merits. You can depend on him. He knows his product is good.

That's one reason why it pays you to read the advertisements in THE BONANZA. It is through advertising that you are able to keep in touch with the good things that progressive business houses are spending their money to introduce and keep before you.

Advertisements are interesting, instructive and profitable. They throw a powerful light on the very things that concern you most. READ THEM!
